

The Evil Sprite

Ulrik Sparkes

It began in a woodland. I could see the fairy people, through their invisibility. I started a conversation with a young one of their kind. For some reason she had to go. I stayed where I was and watched her go. I saw somebody looking over a wall where she'd disappeared to. The somebody came to where I was. I figured it must be the girl's mother.

I said to her 'It is a shame that I will have to be mind-wiped.'
She said 'I will try to get the fairy people not to mind-wipe you.'
I replied 'Don't do anything that would put you in harms way.'
And she went.

There was a nearby culvert that the fairy people used to surface in. Their mission was to retrieve a rogue Larok stone. A Larok stone is A stone, about a metre wide and it has several symbols on it. The Larok stones have personalities, sometimes they would appear on the surface and then a squadron of fairies had to retrieve them before any human noticed them and queried what they were.

There was an evil sprite who hated humans. He was a very clever sprite and he had a laboratory in which he engineered a contagion that would kill all humans but leave fairies unharmed. He snuck the contagion into Rome's water supply. It wasn't too much trouble for him; there was only two security guards at Rome's main water purification plant. Within weeks the contagion had spread throughout the entire human population of the planet. It took one week from catching it to dying and it was undetectable until it killed you. However there were a couple of people who it didn't affect. Of course I was one of them. I had grouped up with some other survivors, who were a team of special forces soldiers and a prepper.

We were looking for food in the city when an elite team of sprites chased us. The jeep we were in was a tough old thing; so we drove into the woods for cover. It went across all the dykes no trouble at all. We managed to lose the sprites but that wasn't the end of our troubles. We drove on for a bit then stopped for water but when we were getting the water a Trulf started chasing us. We all bolted for the jeep, but I wasn't fast enough and they couldn't wait, so they drove off as fast as they could. The Trulf was chasing me. I ran away from it as fast as I could. The jeep came by. I tried to jump onto it, but my hand missed it by a matter of millimetres.

The jeep was circling around again. I just managed to grab it this time. We stunned the Trulf with some fairy weapons we had salvaged and were off. We were looking for food round nearby farms, when we came across a vast field of barley with a path down the middle. At the end of the path there was a farmhouse. We found a person there who had survived and we asked her if she could spare any food. But whilst we were engaged in conversation I noticed a sprite duck behind a wall and realised it wasn't a person at all, to whom we were talking, it was a shape-shifter. We managed to get behind cover, just as the fairies started to fire at us. We fired back over the tall Cornish hedge we were hiding behind.

The rest of my group kept them distracted, while I snuck round behind the fairies. I threatened them. The others came over and tied the fairies up. We explored the farm for a bit and discovered an underground tunnel. We followed it along and then it surfaced at the other end. They were building a vast super weapon.

It was like a radar dish with massive pipes that plasma ran through. It had a targeting system that ran on the magnetic field of the earth. We found the sprite that started all this. That wasn't all that we found there. We found a mind control device that he was using to make all the fairies loyal to him. We deactivated it, the fairy command arrested him and that was that;

THE END